The Homestead Law.

The real settler has the privilege of going upon 160 acres of government land anywhere, and homesteading it and living upon it and getting it for absolutely nothing—free for his residence upon it.

But even granting the claims of Senator Hansbrough of North Dakota, where the commutation clause has been freely utilized to enable cattlemen to increase their land holdings, and of Senator Clark of Wyoming, where the desert land act has resulted in the acquirement of immense landed estates into single ownership for the purpose of cattle and sheep raising, and of Senator Dubois of Idaho, where the commutation clause has been found most useful to big timber syndicates in stealing great tracts of government forest land, and various others—granting their claim, for the sake of argument, that the railroads will benefit their property by the repeal of these land stealing laws, is that any sufficient reason, as Congressman Reeder of Kansas said in a speech the other day, why they should be repealed? Is that a reason worthy of statesmen why the best of the remaining public lands—lands which can later be irrigated and made to support families upon twenty and forty acre tracts—should be practically stolen from the government through a set of laws so loose and so open to evasion that millions of acres are going through them every year without settlement and without home building—laws so miserably constructed and capable of abuse that since national irrigation became a fixed policy the public land disposals have increased annually by leaps and bounds—increased from 8,453,896.92 acres in 1898 to 9,182,413.16 in 1899, to 13,353,887.96 in 1900, to 15,562,796.30 in 1901, to 19,488,535.30 in 1902, to 22,824,299 in 1903, and at the present rate of increase will be fully 25,000,000 acres in 1904.

The railroads are openly in favor of the repeal of these laws. They are showing but common sense and business wisdom in urging such legislation and doing everything they can to promote it, for they desire to see their lines built up and their freight traffic increased by the shipment of varied agricultural products, and this can only be accomplished by settlement and population and farming and growing agricultural diversification, rather than livestock raising for the next fifty years.
